All of the options in the app are displayed as tabs at the top of the screen, so you can easily access them with a simple click. Photographer David Do is the author of Photo Editor and the developer of the app, which looks like a fairly straightforward photo editor, but features an abundance of options. You can for example change various effects like Exposure, Color, Light and other settings, create a slideshow, add text, filters and effects to your photos and much more. To add some great effects to your images, you can use different types of effects, among which is the sepia filter. It's basically the same as the traditional sepia tone, but it could help bring some depth to your photos. You can also apply a negative effect, in other words, a black & white effect, or use a toning filter to bring color back into your images. Another cool option in Photo Editor is the Clone Tool, which lets you copy and paste certain parts of your image. You can create an exact copy of an area of the image by simply dragging it. If you need some better screen sharing capabilities, you can use Screencast, which lets you record your screen activities and broadcast them. Another great feature of Photo Editor is the ability to change the app's colors. You can use the app's color picker to change the white balance, saturation, and brightness or just pick colors from an image. Photographer David Do has a handful of paid apps as well, which you can check out if you like his apps. Photo Editor for Windows Screenshot: Vine Video Editor is a video editor with plenty of options. At first glance, it doesn't look that impressive, but then again, we're talking about a video editor, so what we're looking for is a great interface that lets us manage plenty of features quickly and

THE STATE, 74330, Court of Appeals of Georgia, Decided April 8, 1987. Ronald B. Smith, for appellant, Harry N. Gordon, District Attorney, for appellee. DEEN, Presiding Judge. The evidence in this case showed that the victim of the assault, Mrs. Perry's husband, returned from work to find her wife's son John playing near a picnic table near the front door of their home. When he saw his son he went to take the boy in to warm him up. He asked John to "shut up" and "come on in." His wife had come out to the yard, but had not left the house. He looked into the house and saw her standing at the back door, near the closet, with her son in the arms of a man he did not recognize. At that point, he said, "Doggone it," grabbed his wife by the arm, and left the house, intending to go to his mother's house. According to the State's evidence, the appellant, John's stepmother, then grabbed the boy's hand and put it over her breast, and said "don't touch." He responded by pulling away and hitting her, at which point she grabbed him, and both she and the child fell to the ground. She picked the boy up and brought him back into the house, where the boy then remained. Mrs. Perry's husband then returned to the house. Mrs. Perry testified that when 77a5ca646e

Image caption JP Morgan was hired by the US Department of Justice (DoJ) to investigate Goldman Sachs Goldman Sachs has been granted immunity by the US government in a deal which will allow it to avoid prosecution for alleged improper dealings with US government agencies. Goldman Sachs will be able to avoid charges over allegations that it misled the US government over its handling of mortgage-backed securities. An investigation by the US Department of Justice is due to conclude later this year. The bank said it was a "positive step for the company". "Important step" JPMorgan Chase will buy the US unit of Goldman, called GS Capital Securities Inc, from its parent, in a deal valued at $1.5bn (£800m). The sale was announced after a deal between the US and Goldman was struck, allowing the bank to avoid a criminal prosecution. "We applaud the government's significant efforts to bring to justice those who have defrauded investors by engaging in the same fraudulent activities that led to the housing crisis. We are pleased to see the success of that effort," said Jamie Dimon, chief executive of JP Morgan. "This important step is a positive step for the company and its employees." The deal also gives JP Morgan the right to buy Goldman's mortgage trading business. GS Capital, Goldman's investment banking arm, lost $2.7bn (£1.6bn) on its mortgage securities in 2007, while the bank's main investment banking unit made a $6.7bn profit. The deal is valued at $1.5bn and is expected to be completed later this year. US officials first investigated Goldman after the company was hired by the US Department of Justice to investigate its role in the financial crisis. In 2008, Goldman paid $550m in fines to US and UK authorities, after admitting to mis-stating the quality of
